

2 John 1:9 (NLT2)

Anyone who wanders away from this teaching has no relationship with God. But anyone who remains in the teaching of Christ has a relationship with both the Father and the Son.

Let's say that you are single (Maybe some of you reading this are) and you meet a guy or girl that you know is the right one and is a gift from heaven. Let's say you talk to this person and you tell him or her that you want a relationship with them, and they say yes that they want a relationship with you as well. But then you go off and see other guys or girls, never talking to or seeing this one special person... okay maybe you do on special occasions like their birthday or special holidays or events a few times a year. So, would you say that you truly have a relationship with that person?

Next year it will be my wife and I's 4 year wedding anniversary. But lets say that we got married a year ago, but for the last year I never saw her or talked to her or even thought about her except one time a year on our anniversary. Or maybe I would think of her when I was short on cash or needed something from her once or twice a year. Would you say I had a good solid relationship with my wife and an ideal marriage?

The answer to both of those scenarios would be a big NO!

With that in mind, it's the same as if you said a prayer, say on Easter, or at one time in your life, asking Jesus to be your Lord and Savior, but then you never spend time with Him, talking to Him, except when you need something from Him, or on the day we celebrate His birthday (Christmas). Also you never listen to Him as He is wanting to speak to you, other then a few times a year when you decide that He is worthy of your awesomeness and you make your presence before Him and you go to church. (Yes you can say ouch here.)

But just like my two examples, that is the same way you are treating the Lord, because you went through a quick ceremony and said "I Do" (the sinners prayer) but there is no relationship at all with Him.

When I got married, no one had to tell me to talk to my wife everyday, or that I should not look at, or go after other women, or that the only time I would want to spend time with her was when I needed something from her, but never when she wanted to spend time with me. No, I talk to her everyday, I see her everyday, I don't want any other woman but her, and I want to do the things that make her happy, once again, not because someone told me that I had to, but because I love her and I want to, after all, isn't that why you married your spouse? But then, is that why you gave your life to Jesus, to have a full time relationship with Him, or just to stay out of hell?

My relationship with the Lord is the same way. I want no other gods before me, only a relationship with the One and only True, Living God. I want to talk to Him everyday, and hear Him talk to me through His word and listening to teachings throughout the day as I hear Him speak to me. I constantly think of Him and can't wait to see Him. I love singing to Him and playing music for Him, not because someone told me I needed to do these things as a Christian, but simply because I love the Lord and He loves me. It's a love relationship that we have, just like I have with my wife, or that you should have with your spouse.

I tell you all of this because; honestly, you should not have to listen to a teaching or read a devotional telling you to spend more time with the Lord. No, it should be simply because you truly Love the Lord, not because your pastor says to read your bible everyday, or tells you to pray everyday, or you read a devotional that tells you to do these things.

If you truly love the Lord, maybe it's time to start showing Him that you do, just like you do with anyone that you love, like your spouse or kids, grandkids or siblings or parents, etc. Not because you are told to, but because you want to have a relationship with the Lord, and that sinners prayer was not just a one time, "get out of hell free" card, but they were true words of love between you and your Savior, Jesus. And that you realize that it's time to have that relationship with Jesus, the relationship that you prayed for when you prayed the sinners prayer!
